Question48:-Read the following passage from From a Logical Point of View; Nine Logico-Philosophical Essay and answer the items that follow.

The totality of our so-called knowledge or beliefs, from the most casual matters of geography and history to the profoundest laws of atomic physics or even of pure mathematics and logic, is a man-made fabric which impinges on experience only along the edges, Or, to change the figure, total science is like a field of force whose boundary conditions are experience. A conflict with experience at the periphery occasions readjustments in the interior of the field. Truth values have to be redistributed over some of our statements. Re-evaluation of some statements entails re-evaluation of others, because of their logical interconnections-the logical laws being in turn simply certain further statements of the system, certain further elements of the field. Having re-evaluated one statement we must re-evaluate some others, which may be statements logically connected with the first or may be the statements of logical connections themselves

Based on the passage given above, the following assumptions have been made

- (i) Nothing is true simply by definition but with reference to experience
- (ii) Truth means overall coherence of the statements
- (iii) geography and history are not sciences

Which of the above assumptions are valid?

Question56:-Read the following passage from The Theory of communicative Action and answer the items that follow

'Political science had to free itself from rational natural law; even modern natural law started from the old-European view that represented society as a politically constituted community integrated through legal norms. The new concepts of bourgeois formal law made it possible to proceed constructively and, from normative points of view, to project the legal political order as a rational mechanism. An empirically oriented political science had to dissociate itself radically from that view. It concerned itself with politics as a societal subsystem and absolved itself of the task of conceiving society as a whole. In opposition to natural-law normativism, it excluded moral practical questions of legitimacy from scientific consideration, or it treated them as empirical questions about descriptively ascertainable beliefs in legitimacy. It thereby broke off relations to the 'rationality problematic'.

Which one of the following statement best reflects the most critical inference that can be made from the passage given above?

A:-To explore the 'rationally problematic' political science has to strengthen and project the legal-political order as a rational mechanism

B:-To explore the 'rationally problematic' political science has to exclude the moral practical questions of legitimacy from scientific consideration

C:-The available two strands of political science will not be able to thematise the 'rationality problematic' unless it broke off from its own foundational principles

D:-The 'rationality problematic' is an original and foundational problem of anthropological philosophy

Question69:-Read the following passage from The conscious Mind by David Chalmers and answer the item below.

"Physical explanation is well suited to the explanation of structure and of function. Structural properties and functional properties are the kind of thing that can be straightforwardly entailed by a low-level physical story, and so are clearly suited for reductive explanation. And almost all the high-level phenomena that we need to explain ultimately come down to structure or function: think of the explanation of waterfalls, planets digestion, reproduction, language. But the explanation of consciousness is not just a matter of explaining structure and function. Once we have explained all the physical structure in the vicinity of the brain, and we have explained how all the various brain function are performed, there is a further sort of explanation consciousness itself."

Which one of the following statements best reflects the most critical inference that can be made from the passage given above?
